introduction

DURING THE LAST WEEKS OF GATHERING IMAGES FOR THIS BOOK, I took a short trip with my wife to visit some wineries near Mendocino, California. When we walked into the Navarro Winery in Philo, I saw an object that summed up everything that I loved about creative reuse. The gallery owners had taken an antique bottle drying rack, covered it with wine bottles, and converted it into a light fixture. It took me a few moments to realize why the wine rack looked so familiar.

The light fixture, stripped of its bottles and lights, was almost identical to Marcel Duchamp's 1914 "readymade" entitled Bottle Dryer or Hedgehog, which can be seen at the Philadelphia Museum of Art. Duchamp's readymade sculptures were revolutionary because they challenged the orthodoxy of the objet d'art. By taking ordinary objects and presenting them as "art," Duchamp ushered in the era of conceptual art. The winery owner at Navarro simply added another twist by lighting their tasting room with an icon of twentieth-century art.

Marcel Duchamp didn't invent creative reuse. In fact, medieval scribes regularly scraped off and reused parchments for their illuminated manuscripts. The ancient Greeks melted down older bronze statues to make newer, more naturalistic ones. Medieval Baghdad supposedly owed its splendor to architectural and decorative elements taken from ancient Babylonian sites. The Romans were the undisputed champions of reuse. They re-carved marble statues of disgraced emperors into statues of emperors with better reputations. The Romans even pillaged decorative elements from monuments and buildings to make new monuments such as the Arch of Constantine, conveniently "re-branding" the characters and symbols to make them fit into their new environs.

Christian cultures embraced creative reuse with equal vigor, superimposing their beliefs and architecture on Roman foundations, both figurative and literal. Early Christians adapted Roman temples into places of worship, decorating them with motifs like Dionysian grapes repurposed to symbolize the blood of Christ. Later churches continued this tradition of reuse. St. Mark's Basilica in Venice is a striking example, covered not only in columns and decorations from the Romans and Greeks, but also from their trading partners in Asia and the Middle East.

Throughout history, the reuse of materials meant different things to different cultures. Sometimes, the reuse of materials showed the dominance of one culture over another. The spoils of war were integrated into buildings as mementos of victory. Other times, reused materials were used to establish a link with classical antiquity. The classical columns in St. Peter's Basilica in Rome are meant to hearken back to the grandeur of ancient Rome.

Finally, and perhaps most importantly, the reuse of materials is about thrift. Ancient cultures from Egypt to India regularly “recycled” their buildings, sculptures, and objects out of convenience and necessity. Whenever resources become scarce, creative reuse becomes second nature.

A more recent example of creative reuse comes from the Werkbund, a German association of designers founded in 1907. The Werkbund was designed to educate the German people about the beauty of well-designed objects. The group offered their minimal designs as an alternative to the mass-marketed objects of popular taste. In the lean years after World War II, Werkbund members embraced the creative reuse of war material. The Werkbund’s archive, the Museum der Dinge (Museum of Things) in Berlin contains beautiful examples of gas masks refashioned into candlestick holders and helmets that have been enameled and turned into cooking pots. The objects are hardly the minimal designs of the original Werkbund, but they are elegant in their simple utility.

1000 Ideas for Creative Reuse has been a joy to curate. As unlikely as it seems, out of the many thousands of brilliant examples submitted, it was hard to limit myself to 1,000. The book contains examples of all three types of reuse I cited earlier: dominance, heritage, and thrift.

Like Duchamp’s readymades, artists like Margaux Lange (Images 343-348) and Stuart Karsten (Image 691) take iconic objects like Barbie dolls and dollar bills and subjugate them to their own vision, fashioning something surprising and new out of objects that are so common as to be invisible. The viewer (or user) is delighted by the designer’s clever use of pedestrian materials.

Like the architects of St. Peters, other artists reuse objects to evoke the past. The burgeoning “steampunk” movement is well-represented in this book. The steampunk movement is based around creating familiar objects that are immaculately crafted using Victorian-era technology. Gears and clockwork harken back to an era that predates disposable silicone chips. Artist Richard Nagy (Image 536) even houses modern, faceless computers in handsome brass, copper, and wood enclosures that would melt the heart of even the most recalcitrant technophobe.

Finally, most of the projects in 1000 Ideas for Creative Reuse are thrifty...or downright ecological. One of the joys of reading this book is guessing the materials used in each project (they are listed in the image directory, page 305). This book contains photographs of literally tons of objects that have escaped the cruel fate of the landfill. It is the desire to transform the everyday cast-off into something extraordinary that is the thread holding this book together.

I consider everything in this book to be art, however, as a concession to organization, I have broken down the chapters into: paper goods and assemblage; couture and soft goods; jewelry and adornment; geek craft and man craft; housewares and furnishings; and art, interiors, and installations. Because of the overlap between categories, deciding which category to place objects in has been as nerve-wracking as planning the seating chart for a society wedding dinner. As I’ve been biting my fingernails down to the quick over these decisions, somewhere, I suspect, Marcel Duchamp is laughing his ass off.

Enjoy,
Garth Johnson

ABOUT THE AUTHOR

Garth Johnson is a studio artist, writer, and assistant professor at College of the Redwoods in Eureka, California. In addition to maintaining the website Extreme Craft (www.extremecraft.com), Garth has written for magazines, museum catalogs, and books worldwide, including CRAFT and Readymade magazines and the companion volume to Faythe Levine's Handmade Nation documentary. His first DVD, ReVision: Recycled Crafts for Earth-Friendly Living, was released by Eyekiss Films in April 2009. When he's not teaching or decorating porcelain plates with a paintball gun, Garth can be found on the road giving his lecture "The Extreme Craft Roadshow." He is currently developing a lecture about the history of creative reuse to complement this book.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

This book would not have been possible without the kind support of fellow craft writers/bloggers like Tsia Carson (Supernaturale.org), Dennis Stevens (RedefiningCraft.com), Betsy Greer (Craftivism.com), and Maria Elena Buszek (Extra/Ordinary: Craft and Contemporary Art). I am also forever indebted to these kind people for helping to spread the word about the book: Natalie Zee Drieu, Rachel Hobson, Becky Stern, Doug Gunzelmann, Cyndi Lavin, Adam Williams, Treehugger.com, Jeanee Ledoux, Amy Shaw, Kim Dom, Shauna Lee Lange, Becky Striepe, Danielle Maveal, and Leah Kramer. I would also like to thank my students and colleagues at College of the Redwoods in Eureka, California, for their contributions and support.

As scary and unlikely as it might sound to him, I would like to thank Henry Owings of Chunklet magazine for being a great role model. Namita Wiggers of the Portland Museum of Contemporary Craft generously took time out of her busy schedule to edit my introduction and help me organize my thoughts. My thanks also go out to Quarry/Rockport's amazing team: Cora Hawks, Tiffany Hill, and their amazing book designer, Sandra Salamony. My editor, Mary Ann Hall, is responsible for planting the initial seeds for this book, and I thank her for being its tireless champion. Finally, I would like to thank my long-suffering wife, Claire, who helped me in more ways than I could possibly list here.

Artists and crafters have always been recyclers, but for many it has not only become a thrifty choice, but also it has become a moral imperative.

1000 Ideas for Creative Reuse contains a cutting-edge collection of some of the most inventive work being made with reused, upcycled, and already existing materials. The work in this book ranges from clever and humble personal accessories to unique and important large-scale works of art, including paper art, fashion, jewelry, housewares, interiors, and installations.
